Dear Patti,

I've enjoyed acting as your academic advisor as well as one of your professors during your time here at Gainesville College. Your motivation and enthusiasm are refreshing. You've been serious about attaining your Personal Training credentials from Day One, and your determination and commitment have never wavered. You have consistently pursued perfection on your path to making that happen. People who are looking for a Personal Trainer will be lucky to have you.

I wish everyone had your work ethic. You were systematic about your homework and orderly in your approach. You did everything I asked and beyond, as evidenced by your 4.0 average. While others may have done a task just well enough to pass, you stayed until you got it right.

That will be important to your clients, because your commitment to doing it right will reduce the risk of injury to your clients.

Your desire to do more than just a weekend certification will payoff for your clients. Your clients will get a program that's tailored just right for their needs and abilities. I've found that other trainers are willing to skip steps, thinking that their clients will never know. That can be dangerous.

You are gracious, but firm. That will serve you well as a Personal Trainer, because you're sometimes going to need to push people to achieve the perfection that they're after. Coupled with your friendly, outgoing personality, and your sincere desire to take care of your clients, you are especially well-suited to succeed as a Personal Trainer.

Sincerely,

Glenn A. Preston
